Save on home decor

Buying the five pieces shown here at a typical home furnishings store could cost you almost $1,500—but this cozy setup rings in at less than half that. The trick: The products are all from teen- and kid-focused retailers. Many of these shops offer significant savings over their grown-up counterparts but stock items that look just as sophisticated. Need proof? Read on. —DANIELLE BLUNDELL pillows > Known for its stylish patterns, Dwell Studio carries a kids' line with adult appeal—and most cushions, like this geometric one, cost less than $40. dwellstudio.com curtains > These brushed-cotton panels, along with Restoration Hardware Baby & Child's entire drapery collection, deliver the classic look of its parent company for a lot less without skimping on quality or size. rhhbabyandchild.com lighting > Go to Pottery Barn Kids for vintage-style lamps, such as this refined fixture, which has a turned base inspired by antique candlesticks. potterybarnkids.com storage > Among the bevy of playful options at Land of Nod (Crate & Barrel's children's emporium), these roomy wire locker baskets stand out. landofnod.com upholstered seating > Trendy teen chain Urban Outfitters offers housewares that rival older sibling Anthropologie's—but at a fraction of the price. Stick to the furniture section, which includes this slipper chair in a classic ikat print. urbanoutfitters.com
